It Was Never Separate

You look at it like it’s outside you.

Something to observe.

Something to understand.

But what if that distance isn’t real?

You don’t just see it.

You meet it.

And something in you responds—

before you think about it.

The image is not separate from the way you experience it.

There is no clean line between what is seen

and the one seeing it.

It was never separate.
